COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS

Petitioner prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals entered July 11, 1972.

Citation To Opinions Below

The Order of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals denying the petitioner's petition for review of the decision of the Committee on Admissions is attached hereto as (1a)* and is not yet reported in either the Official or Unofficial Reports.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on July 11, 1972. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3), or in the alternative 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

The Questions Presented

1. Whether the rights of the petitioner under the Constitution were infringed by the refusal of the Committee on Admissions to allow the petitioner to take the July, 1972 bar examination for admission to practice as an attorney in the District of Columbia, when at the time the petitioner first applied to take the examination in 1971 he was found to be eligible, having graduated from the Law School of Duquesne University, but the respondent refused permission for him to take the July, 1972 examination on the grounds that under a newly promulgated Rule the petitioner was ineligible because, at the time of his graduation the Law School of Duquesne University was not then on the approved list of the American Bar Association?

2. Whether the District of Columbia and its Committee on Admissions could enforce its rule, on a retrospective basis, requiring that all candidates for admisison to the bar examinations to be graduates of law schools approved by the American Bar Association?

3. Whether the application of Rule No. 3 by the Committee on Admissions of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals was arbitrary and capricious, in denying the applicant the opportunity to take the July, 1972 bar examination, when it was shown, that at the time of the petitioner's graduation from law school in 1935 he was then eligible to take the bar examination both in the State of Pennsylvania and in the District of Columbia and there was no requirement by the District of Columbia that a law school had to be approved by the American Bar Association?

* Matter in ( ) refer to pages of the Appendix.

Constitutional Provisions Involved

The constitutional provisions involved in this petition are the due process clause and the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; and the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

Statement

1. This is a petition for a writ of certiorari to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. The petitioner herein filed an application to take the July, 1972 bar examination to be given by the Committee on Admissions of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. The petitioner was informed by Anthony Nigro, Secretary of the Committee on Admissions, by a letter dated May 22, 1972 (8a) that he did not possess the necessary qualifications for admission under Rule 3 of the Rules of the Committee on Admissions. By a letter dated May 25, 1972, the petitioner requested the committee to reconsider his application, claiming that the application of Rule 3 to his case on a literal basis should not be made because it would, in effect, be retrospective (7a). On May 31, 1972 the Committee's position denying the application was restated by the Secretary (6a).

On June 8, 1972, the petitioner made a formal petition to the Committee on Admissions. On June 23, 1972, the Committee, by its Secretary, again notified the petitioner that the decision of the Committee after review, remained unchanged (5a). The petitioner then filed a petition in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals requesting a review of the decision made by the Committee on Admissions appointed by the Court (3a-7a). As noted above, the petition was denied without opinion (1a).

It must be noted, that the petitioner herein does not seek an Order from this court permitting him to practice law without having the necessary qualifications. Rather, the relief he requests is from the oppressive, arbitrary and capricious application of Rule 3 which denied him the opportunity to take the bar examination on the grounds that he is ineligible, whereas in fact, at the time of his graduation there was no such requirement. Ex Parte Garland, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366, 370, 377 (1866).

The petitioner is 63 years of age. He is a graduate of Ohio University, B.A. cum laude (1931). He was admitted to the School of Law of Duquesne University in 1931. He was graduated with an LL.B degree in 1935. While still young and green, he took the Pennsylvania Bar Examination in the Summer of 1935 and failed. In 1971, he applied for permission to take the June, 1971 bar examination given in the District of Columbia. In 1971 the petitioner had submitted to the Committee on Admissions and Grievances of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, a letter from the Assistant Dean of the Law School of Duquesne University dated May 24, 1971 (10a) setting forth the caliber of the school and its graduates. He was allowed to take the 1971 bar examination because he had been eligible to take the examination at the time he graduated (9a). Mr. Sellars did sit for the June, 1971 bar examination. He passed 3 out of 6 parts (passing 4 out of six is required for admission). He then filed an application to sit for the examination again in July, 1972, and proceeded to take an extensive review course given in the District of Columbia. The Committee on Admissions, however, notwithstanding that he had previously been eligible, refused to allow him to take the July, 1972 examination (8a, 6a). The Court of Appeals rendered its decision on July 11, 1972 (1a) the day preceding the examination, denying his petition. If this decision is reversed, the petitioner intends to sit for the next examination.

After the petitioner had failed the 1935 Pennsylvania bar examination, he became a successful radio commentator, lecturer, writer and editor. He was listed in "Who's Who In America". In the early 1960's, he developed cancer of the larynx and lost a vocal cord. This effectively put an end to his speaking career. By 1965, he was well enough to go back to work and he turned to his training in the law. He began to assist persons in their applications before the Immigration and Naturalization Service. In this work he could function extremely well without having to worry about being a great, or even a near-great orator. In 1971, he was notified by the Immigration and Naturalization Service that they would no longer permit him to represent the public unless he was admitted to practice as an attorney. To require the petitioner, who is now approaching the age where in many industries retirement is mandatory, to repeat a complete law school education in order to sit for the bar examination would indeed be a great and unnecessary hardship.

It would appear that the action of the Committee in refusing permission to the petitioner herein was arbitrary and capricious. See: England v. Louisiana State Board of Medical Examiners, 259 F. 2d 622, rehearing denied 263 F. 2d 661 (CA-5) Cert. denied 359 U.S. 1012, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1036, 79 S. Ct. 1149. A State (the District of Columbia) cannot exclude a person from the practice of law or from any other occupation in a manner that contravenes the due process or equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U.S. 114, 32 L. Ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. 231.

The petitioner does not deny the propriety of the rule, as stated in the cases cited above, that the District of Columbia has an interest and may well prescribe the requirements to sit for the District of Columbia bar examination. He does not deny that it has the power to require, on a prospective basis, that the applicant show he graduated from a school which was on a list approved by the American Bar Association. See: Rosenthal v. State Bar Examining Committee, 116 Conn. 409, 165 Atl. 211, 87 A.L.R. 991 (1933); Nebraska ex rel Ralston v. Turner, 141 Neb. 556, 4 N.W. 2d 302, 144 A.L.R. 138, 150-182 (1942). In Nebraska v. Turner (supra) the Supreme Court of Nebraska promulgated a rule that in order to take the bar examination in Nebraska an applicant would have to show that he was a graduate of a reputable school, one on the list approved by the Court. After the rule was promulgated, the applicant commenced study at a school that was not on the approved list. The Legislature then passed a law stating that all law schools in the State of Nebraska are deemed to be reputable and that the graduate of any law school in the state would be eligible to take the examination. The Court struck the statute down as unconstitutional and an invasion of the right of the Court to set the necessary standards. The Court was careful to point out that the applicant had commenced school after the adoption of the Court rule and before the enactment of the statute. It held that the applicant had been on notice and therefore the application to take the examination was denied. In Application of Saunders, 295 F. Supp. 265 (D.C.

V.I., 1968) the District Court refused to exercise its discretion where it was shown that the applicant enrolled in a LaSalle Extension University correspondence course, a year after the rule was enacted requiring graduation from an accredited law school. The Court said the petitioner had more than a year's notice that he could not become a member of the Virgin Islands Bar, unless he was graduated from an accredited law school. This is markedly different from the case at bar. In the present case, the requirement of graduation from a school on the American Bar Association approved list came after the petitioner had graduated, and had been eligible to take the examination at the time of his graduation.

The lapse of 37 years should not prejudice the petitioner's application. Having once passed a hurdle necessary to be overcome, before the next step can be taken, the applicant should not in good conscience be relegated to the bottom of the hill again like Sisyphus. In Willner v. Committee on Character and Fitness, 373 U.S. 96, 10 L. Ed. 2d 224, 83 S. Ct. 1175, 2 A.L.R. 3d 1254, this Court granted certiorari many years after the Committee on Character and Fitness, and indeed all of the Courts having jurisdiction thereof in the State of New York had denied an applicant's right to practice law. This Court remanded the case, based upon a new application to the Committee, in which he requested a hearing with respect to "his moral fitness". In the case at bar, neither the Committee, nor the District of Columbia Court of Appeals denied the application on the grounds that there was too long a lapse of time between the date of his graduation, and the time he applied to sit for the examination. They arbitrarily refused to permit him to take the examination. See: Schware v. Board of Bar Examiners, 353 U.S. 232, 1 L. Ed. 2d 796, 77 Sup. Ct. 752, 64 A.L.R. 2d 288.

The application of Rule 3 to the petitioner herein has no reasonable basis. It is arbitrary and capricious and, under all of the circumstances, should not have been applied in the literal manner in which it was applied here. Dent v. State of West Virginia, 129 U.S. 114, 121, 122, 9 S. Ct. 231, 233, 32 L. Ed. 623 (1889). England v. Louisiana, supra. Ex parte Garland, supra.

The District of Columbia Court of Appeals only recently ruled that the Federal Civil Service Commission, based upon an Act of Congress, could not deny an alien the right to take a civil service examination solely on the grounds that the applicant was an alien. Jalil v. Haughton, 460 Fed. 2d 923 (CA, DC—1972). In doing so, it followed Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365, 91 S. Ct. 1848, 29 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1971). In de Rodulfa v. United States, 461 Fed. 2d 1240, 1247 (CA, DC 1972) the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia reiterated the rule concerning the application of laws on a prospective, rather than an retrospective, basis. Nevertheless, in the case at bar it affirmed the action of the Committee on Admissions which had applied this rule to the petitioner on a retrospective basis.

In Ex parte Garland (supra), the applicant had been admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1860. In 1861, the State of Arkansas seceded from the Union. In 1862, Congress decreed that in order to practice before the Court, an oath would have to be taken by any applicant for admission to the bar. In 1865, this oath was expanded to include not only an oath that he would uphold the Constitution of the United States, and the Government, etc., but also that he had never in the past voluntarily borne arms against the United States, etc. During the war between the states, Mr. Garland had been an active "rebel".

After the war, Mr. Garland received a full Presidential pardon for the activities in which he was engaged during the Civil War. With the pardon in hand, he applied to the Supreme Court to be permitted to practice again. The Court in reviewing the oath and the Act of Congress upon which it was based stated at Page 377, "all enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties, and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included". The Court went on to rescind the amendment of the second rule of the Court which required the oath prescribed by the act of January 24, 1965, on the above grounds and pointed out that ex post facto legislation was repugnant to the Constitution.

CONCLUSION

The application of the rule on a retrospective basis as applied to the petitioner in this case, and to all others who may have graduated from schools that were not on a list as being approved by the American Bar Association, prior to the date when the rule was enacted, is arbitrary and capricious. The petition for the Writ of Certiorari should be granted.

Petitioner,

KENNETH WELLS PARKINSON, JACOB A. STEIN, JEANNE L. DOBRES, WILLIAM C. GARDNER, JAMES A. HOURIHAN, CHARLES J. STEELE, all members of The Committee on Admissions, Respondents.

To the Honorable Chief Judge and Associate Judges of Said Court:

I, Lee T. Sellars, 801 Gramatan Avenue, Mount Vernon, New York (presently residing at 2134 G Street, Washington, D. C. while taking a bar review course) respectfully petition your honorable court to review a decision of the Committee on Admissions denying me the privilege of sitting for the July 1972 bar examination.

For the June 1971 examination I was approved to take the exam by the then Committee of the District Court.

Appendix B

Their reasoning was, "because at the time of your graduation you would have been eligible."

Memorandum of law attached.

Copies of pertinent correspondence

APPENDIX B-1

Memorandum of Law

(1) The Committee on Admissions denied my request to take the July bar examination stating that the Committee's Rule 3 was a bar thereto.

(2) I contend that Rule 3 does not apply to anyone who has already qualified to take the District of Columbia bar examination. When I finished law school in 1935 I was qualified to take the examination here.

(3) In 1935 there was no Rule 3 requiring one's law school to be approved by the American Bar Association; and a number of my classmates took the District of Columbia bar exam that year.

(4) To impose Rule 3 on me, who has been qualified to take the exam for the past 37 years, would have the effect of a retroactive law, and, like ex post facto laws on the criminal side, would violate due process by depriving me of a vested right.

(5) I do not seek any waiver of the present rules.

(6) I do sincerely and respectfully ask the Court to amend Rule 3 in order to clarify a latent ambiguity in that rule by indicating that it has no application to those candidates who had previously qualified.

(7) If I am not permitted to sit for the July examination my means of livelihood will be directly threatened.

APPENDIX B-2

Personal History of Lee T. Sellars

After graduation from Ohio University (cum laude) I entered Duquesne University School of Law in 1931 and completed the course in 1935, receiving an LL.B degree (later changed to Juris Doctoris). I failed the Pennsylvania bar examination in the summer of 1935.

By this time however I was embarked upon the career of a radio commentator, lecturer, writer and editor. This work continued happily, and I was listed in Who's Who in America for years—until the early sixties when cancer of the larynx developed and I lost a vocal cord. This ended my speaking career, and I looked to my original training, law, to earn a living.

I became an immigration lawyer in 1965 and have continued this practice to date. The Immigration Service has pointed out that I must pass a bar somewhere in order to continue my practice. Since I am dealing only with federal law as an immigration counsel I decided to take the D. C. bar examination. Since February 1971 I have earnestly reviewed the law with the purpose of passing the District of Columbia bar exam. To reach the peak required to pass such an exhaustive effort is no child's play for a fellow my age. But I sincerely think I am better prepared for the July exam than ever before in my life. I am in the midst of my third bar review course since February 1971. I must pass this examination. There is no alternative.

My office is located at 11 Park Place in Downtown, New York City. I am unusually successful in my "second career." I have been of real service to more people in the past seven years than all my other years put together.

With the help of your Honorable Court and the Almighty I will be able to continue.

Dear Mr. Nigro:

I have your letter of May 22 denying me permission to take the bar examination in July.

It seems to me your Rule 3 applies to current and future law students as a guide to the kind of background they need in order to qualify to take the D. C. examination. It cannot apply to a person who has already qualified—such as I.

When I finished law school in 1935 American Bar Association approval of law schools was not then the criterion for acceptability in most jurisdictions, including the District of Columbia. I was qualified therefore to take the D. C. examination in 1935. I contend if I was qualified then, I am qualified now.

Your interpretation of Rule 3 of the Rules on Admission for my particular case has the effect of retrospective law, and, like ex post facto laws on the criminal side, it violates due process if it deprives one of a vested right. I had a vested right upon graduation to take your examination in 1935 and nothing should deprive me of that right now.

Appendix E

I earn my livelihood by practicing before the Immigration Service. As I explained to you when I was in your office a few weeks ago, they now require me to become a member of the federal bar to continue my practice.

I trust you will take this matter up with your Committee immediately so the way may be cleared for me to take the July examination without resorting to judicial review.

Very truly yours,

Washington, D.C. 20001

Dear Mr. Curtin:

This letter is written on behalf of Lee T. Sellars of New York City who is applying for admissions to the District of Columbia. Mr. Sellars graduated from the Law School in 1935 in good standing. He had received a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1931 from Ohio University. I understand that Mr. Sellars' application to take the D.C. Bar has been rejected because he did not graduate in 1935 from a law school approved by the American Bar Association. It is true that Duquesne was not approved by the American Bar Association until 1960, but prior to that time it had been accredited by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and hundreds of our graduates had been admitted to practice before the highest court of most of our States. In fact, many of our graduates prior to 1960 have been elected and appointed to the Bench of State and Federal Courts. One of our most outstanding graduates, Austin L. Staley, was the Chief Justice of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals until several years ago. I bring this to your attention because it seems unfair to deny Mr. Sellars the opportunity to take the Bar Exam because of the lack of accreditation of Duquesne in 1935. I can assure you that the standards set by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in 1935 for accreditation were equal or higher than those set by the American Bar Association. I can further assure you that the scope and quality of Mr. Sellars' legal education was clearly the equivalent of our present legal education.

I sincerely hope that you and your committee could waive the requirement that Mr. Sellars be a graduate of an American Bar Association approved school.

Very truly yours,

John J. Sciullo
Associate Dean
